Philadelphia photographer Brian C. Moss will be exhibiting his unique large-scale works at the Painted Bride Art Center, September 1 thru 16 in an exhibition entitled "What helps Dodge helps YOU."

The show is the result of two years of work funded by a grant from the Painted Bride. Moss worked on the site of the abandoned Dodge Steel Castings company near the Tacony-Palmyra Bridge. From scrap metal and illegally dumped trash, he constructed a giant, functioning pin-hole camera on the back of a trailer. The camera, some 12 feet high and 10 feet long, was used to photograph the factory's skeleton framework, which is all that remains of the Dodge Steel facility. His camera produced 40 square inch images which Moss has hung in three rows of three images each to produce the monumental works installed at the Painted Bride.

Following the exhibition, Moss' "What Helps Dodge Helps YOU" will be shown as part of Tacony History Day at the Disston Recreation Center on Sept. 18. His giant camera will be included in a community parade.
